JOHN D. AND STRIKES

[From Town Talk.]

John D. Spreckels had a very unusual experience in the present strike the other day. His interests are so extensive and varied that if any labor troubles are going on in this territory the chances are that he will in some way be connected with them. He takes such a deep, personal interest in the details of all his holdings that at the sound of the word "strike" he is usually on hand, to learn what it is all about and to see that any hindered work is pushed ahead with all the efficiency possible under the circumstances. That is why John D., as he is referred to by his employees, usually has some very unusual experience during any strike troubles. For instance, during the stereotypers' strike on the daily papers, John D. stripped himself to his undershirt and went down into the hot, close atmosphere of the stereotyping room of the Call. There he worked amongst the casting boxes, metal pots and rollers with a job lot of impressed clerks, errand boys and scabs, who were struggling to turn out the plates for the presses. Outsiders who saw the millionaire proprietor wrestling with refractory metal and profusely sweating over his work, grinned at him and joked him, but John D. never minded them in the least. He stuck to his task, strove to learn his level best to turn out the very best plates he could. He stuck to it, too, when he badly turned himself with a red hot plate just taken from the casting box.

The other day found him stripped for "strike work," as usual, and down on the dock bossing the scab longshoremen, who were struggling to load his steamer Sierra. He succeeded all right and got her off on schedule time, but along about the close of his work he went over to one side of the vessel to see how things had progressed there. A tug containing a picket guard of union men was stationed just off the steamer to spot the scabs and try and drag them into the union ranks. The picket men recognized John D., and as soon as he turned to cross the deck several voices from among them shouted derisively, "Scab!" John D. wheeled instantly and looked them straight in the eyes. "I'm no scab," he said quietly. "This steamer on which I stand is my steamer; that tug, on which you are standing is my tug. I'm working on my own property, and I'm working for myself, and, by hades, no man shall stop me." Then he turned to his work. Nobody said a word.

COMMERCIALISM IN ART

"How are you getting on in your literary labors?"
"Badly. I can't keep my attention on my story. I am writing for a publication that pays 2 cents a word, and every time I use a word of more than three syllables I feel as if I were wasting money."—Washington Star.

PHYSICAL AMERICAN MAN

The most important, because the most fundamental, of problems concerning the quality of the American man concern his physical condition as compared with that of his kindred beyond the sea. As to this point the evidence is so clear that it needs little discussion. It is evident that the American Indians, a race evidently on the ground for many thousands of years before the coming of the Europeans, had found the land hospitable. For savages they were remarkably well developed and, though untrained for steady labor, their bodies were well made and enduring. Taking their place, the north Europeans, representing a wide range of local varieties, English, Irish, Highland Scotch, Germans, Scandinavians, Normans French and many other groups of old world peoples, have since their implantation a hundred years or more ago, shown that the area of the continent from the Rio Grande to the far North is as suited to our kind as is any part of the earth.

This is sufficiently proved by the statistics of American soldiers gathered during the Civil War; the Americans white man of families longest in this country is, on the average, larger than his European kinsman, the increase being mainly in the size of head and chest. It is further indicated by the endurance of these men in the trials of a soldier's life and by the remarkable percentage of recoveries from wounds. This endurance of wounds was regarded by the late Dr. Brown-Sequard as a feature common to all the mammals of this continent, being, as he claimed, on the basis of an extensive experience, characteristic of American rabbits as of American men. Moreover, the statistics of life insurance companies doing business in this country appear to indicate that the expectation of life is greater here than in the old world.—International Monthly.

A SCIENTIFIC TRAGEDY.

"Yes," said the scientist, "our astronomers have demonstrated beyond a doubt that there is snow on the moon, that the sun is growing colder every day, and—"
Poor fellow! He was zealous, but misguided, and as the crowd made a rush for him a thoughtful policeman sent for the ambulance and they took him hence in sections.—Denver Times.

Philippine Lepers.

Washington, Aug. 19.—The army officers in the Philippines are making preparations for the care of lepers. The report of a board of officers convened in Northern Luzon to gather data on the conditions obtaining on the subject, recommends the island of Barri, which is said to be uninhabited and of sufficient size, two miles by one mile, to accommodate the lepers of Luzon.

This report was transmitted to the commission, and attention invited to the recommendations contained in the previous reports on the same general subject. Further developments of the leper colony and the actual work of the segregation of lepers await proper legislation.
